

Warehousing Training

The logistics sector is a vital part of the business economy, responsible for the direct and indirect employment of more than 1.5 million people across the country. Companies are now increasingly using distribution and warehousing capabilities to differentiate themselves from their competitors.

Apprenticeships are nationally designed training programmes aimed at employees who are new to the distribution and warehousing industry and those who wish to broaden their existing knowledge and skills. Allowing employees to train whilst in work, learners gain a thorough understanding about stock control, delivery receipt and customer enquiries.
